And the People One Meet There.

(Communicated by R. W. Jencks.)

My intimacy with St. Leger led me often in her society. When the walks were not too long she would often join me in our rambles about the country. Her great passion was botany and as I had always been something of a botanist, I was enabled to be of use in her favorite pursuit.

Never before had I taken so deep an interest in everything relating to herbs, flowers and plants.
I looked forward to our morning walks with the greatest impatience, and did not join us, all my little plans of enjoyment for the day were dashed to the ground, for I knew there would be no horizon.

St. Leger never failed to visit the grounds, but as he did not wish to deprive his mother and sister of the pleasure of listening to the music they would occasionally, under my escort, pass an hour or two of the evening sitting under the trees in front of the Mansion de Conversation.

These were my pleasantest moments; inspired by the music, the light and the crowd I forgot her thoughtfulness, talking and laughing as much as any one. She was very happy in her enthusiasm, on all she saw, particularly on some curious specimens of John Bull, who with sadness depicted upon their faces, paced regularly up and down in the most unbecomingly and heart-rending manner, scarcely ever looking to the right or left. Eve wondered if they were traveling for pleasure.

I scarcely ever saw Jules now, except at breakfast. In a few days he became the lion of Baden and the terror of Benazet. The winner of very large sums, he had caused the bank to close four times in two weeks, an event unparalleled in the annals of gambling at Baden. This is called breaking the bank, though I never could exactly understand why, as the game is only stopped for a few hours, when it is resumed and goes on as briskly as ever.

Jules, who even at Paris was noted for the elegance of his dress, now became a model for all the exquisites of the place.

He frequently wore in the morning a velvet coat of peculiar cut, white vest and trousers, blue cravat, and straw hat with blue ribbon.
This costume suddenly became as plentiful as umbrellas in a shower. The tailor shops had out of placards, such as: "Velvet coats in a large quantity, cravats, idem, and trunks on grand magnificent straw hats in a large quantity."

Jules pretended to be annoyed, but I am persuaded that he rather liked the singular honors thus thrown upon him. People on the promenade would stop, turn around, and look at him as if he had been an elephant, or an hippopotamus.

When he approached the tables there was always a slight pause to see how Monsieur le Marquis could play; after making four or five very heavy bets, he would generally leave the room followed by a buzz of admiration. For the moment he was the Napoleon of the table.

The old proverb of, lucky at cards and unlucky in love, seemed about to realize itself. One fine morning San Carlo arrived from the wars, and Jules could no longer use the villa of the Comtesse as an habitual lounging place, could no longer be the constant escort of that lady in her rides, drives, walks and visits to the Maison de Conversation. However, that portion of his time, esteem, and friendship, which he saw himself obliged to withdraw from the wife, was lavishly bestowed on the husband. The Comte and Jules were constantly seen together. Side by side at the table-d'hôte, the Comte, guided by Jules' advice, shared a large portion of his good fortune.

At this juncture an event happened which caused a great scandal, and was a fine day wonder at Baden. St. Leger, Jules, and myself had been dining at the restaurant. As we sat quietly seated on the terrace enjoying our cigars and coffee, the Comte de San Carlo approached us with a smile on his face, saying his hat polished, then suddenly turning to St. Leger, said:
"Sir, your manner of wearing your hat displeases me, permit me to remove it," and snuffing the action to the words, he knocked it off with his cane. The next moment he lay sprawling at the Captain's feet. The whole place was in an uproar.

The Comte was surrounded, restrained and borne off by his friends, while St. Leger and myself walked towards the Hotel de l'Europe. On the way he said: "For my reasons, impossible to explain, he felt that he was the original offender, though the Comte had put himself in a bad light before the public by his conduct of this evening," which in any least of it was in very bad taste. Of course he would have from San Carlo that very night, and he begged that I should act for him. He didn't care to ask Jules, as he had of late been so intimate with the Comte. It was arranged that I should go to my rooms and wait there for my friend of San Car-lo's, whom the Captain might refer to me. I had not long to wait. San Carlo's friend was an extremely prepossessing young Italian officer, who had made the recent Italian campaign.

He depicted the event sincerely and much regretted that it was one of those cases admitting of no explanation or mitigation. The meeting was arranged for four o'clock next morning, in a little room near the village of Dolien, on the road to Rastatt—the sun being shining. As soon as everything was settled I repaired to the Hotel de l'Europe to acquaint St. Leger with the result.

It was already past eleven. I found him in his room busily engaged writing. Neither his mother nor sister had heard of the affair, though it was at that moment the talk of all Baden. Should anything happen on the morrow, he begged that I would act the part of a protector to these ladies on their journey to England. On my faithfully promising to take his place, as much as in my power lay, he seemed relieved of a great anxiety.

I insisted that he should take some rest before morning, promising to make all the arrangements and meet him on the Liechtenthal at four and a half sharp; a carriage would be in waiting near by.

I had very little sleep that night. It was after ten when I threw myself on the sofa for an hour or so. At four the surgeon was in front of the door. St. Leger was punctual. We were the first on the ground—in a very few minutes the Comte and his party made their appearance. After the usual salutations the preliminaries were arranged and the men placed. San Carlo gained the choice of position; placing his back to the east, he threw the first rays of the morning's sun directly on his antagonist's face. There was a settled malignity in the Comte's eyes which contrasted strongly with the open frank countenance and mild blue eye of St. Leger. Whatever feeling existed was evidently all on one side. After a few passes they went seriously to work, the Comte attacking with a vigor and fury requiring all the Captain's skill to parry. As St. Leger remained entirely on the defensive the result was not difficult to foresee. A severe wound in the region of the chest soon brought him to the ground. The surgeon pronounced it a very serious matter. We carried him on a litter to Dol-ien and arranged, everything as comfortably as the miserable little inn of the Golden Stag would admit of.

I then started off to break the matter as gently as possible to the mother and daughter. San Carlo, after hastily expressing his regrets, hurried to gain the French frontier. We afterwards heard that he had a narrow escape from the police, who were waiting for him at Kehl.

It was near nine when I reached the hotel de l'Europe. The ladies were at breakfast and seemed much surprised to see me at so early an hour. Craven had gone out quite early on horseback and left word not to wait in kitchen for him.
As gently as possible I informed them of what had taken place. Lady St. Leger told the painful intelligence much better than Eve. I calmed them as much as possible, assuring them that the wound, though causing much physical suffering, was really not at all dangerous.

Lady St. Leger and myself immediately returned to Dolien, and though Eve begged very hard to accompany us, her mother could on no account permit it, saying she was too much excited and overcome to be of the slightest use to her unfortunate brother, and the spectacle of his sufferings would only tend to give her additional pain.

I took up my quarters at the Golden Stag, and for three weeks scarcely left St. Leger's bedside. Eve watched over him with the devotion of an angel. Had it not been for her mother, she would have sat there night and day ministering to his slightest wants. She glided noiselessly around the room, shutting out the light here, placing flowers where Craven might see them, tempting him with some refreshing beverage, and doing a thousand little things to cheer and amuse, which only a woman can think of.

Some of woman's noblest attributes are developed in the sick room. To me Eve seemed more beautiful while occupied in this kindly office, than ever before. She was a true woman, her kindness of heart, gentleness of disposition, and devotion to those she loved, were only equalled by her innocence and honesty. Happy the man who could win a heart like hers.

Under such admirable nursing, St. Leger improved much more quickly than was expected.— Towards the last of August, he was well enough to drive out. Once again he found himself back in his old quarters at the Hotel de l'Europe.

Jules meantime had not been idle, taking advantage of the absence of the Comte, he had redoubled his attentions to Madame, who, unimpaired of the opening phrase of Telemachus-Calypso could not console herself for the departure of Ulysses—soon forgot everything in the society of Monsieur Marquis le Cottignon.

One day Jules told me in the strictest confidence: "Mon cher, j'enfere le Comte." What will you? "I find that this charming woman has become necessary to my existence. We shall elope this afternoon in the most romantic and manner of last sort of a manner, taking the railroad for Munich, from whence we propose proceeding to the Austrian Tyrol for the month of September. The Comtesse has been placed in a false position by the absurd conduct of her husband vis-a-vis St. Leger. She feels it very keenly, and I am persuaded that it is now owing to this than anything else, that in the language of novelists, 'she has consented to fly with me.'"

NEWS ITEMS.
Rev. Timothy P. Gillette died at Hartford, Connecticut, on Monday, at the age of eighty-six.
He was settled over the Congregational Church in Hartford in 1838, and has continued uninterruptedly in the same to the time of his death. He was through life a regular and useful clergyman, and leaves a very large property, the accumulation of a life of economy. His salary at no time ever exceeded $800 per annum, and his estate will equal $100,000.

The Medical Department of the United States Army has forwarded to the United States Commissioners at the Paris Exposition a large collection of models of various kinds, including a model of the Rucker ambulance, models of improved litters for conveying wounded men, plans of army hospitals, contrivances for attending the sufferings of the wounded, such as splints for the arm and legs, and many other articles of a similar character.

Cool veins, respectively etc and three feet in thickness have been struck near Leavenworth, at a distance of about six hundred feet beneath the surface. The Leavenworth Conservator thinks the supply will be sufficient for the entire State of Kansas.

The Eaton (Ohio) Register describes a singular and sad accident which occurred in that place.
Lenny C. Stephens, a daughter of John W. Stephens, fell while carrying a large basket, which was broken by her fall. A fragment struck her neck, severing the carotid artery and jugular vein, and the girl soon died in death.

The Martinsburg New Era says that a very important decision has been rendered in the case of Judge Hall, in relation to suits of particulars who were in the rebel army. It decided that, although such parties could not sue in their own names, yet they might make a bona fide assignment of their claims, and the assignee would be allowed to maintain the suit in his name.

The posse of Police and State Constables made a descent upon the gambling establishment of William A. Engle, at Worcester, on Saturday, and captured thirty-nine players; and later in the evening five more were arrested at another den and locked up.

A freight train on the Toga railroad, near Ohring, was thrown from the track and into the river. A hand car on the track was the cause of the mischief. One man was killed outright, and another fatally injured.

Brigadier General Charles Russell, Lieutenant Colonel of the regular army, a resident of Indianapolis, and formerly of the Twenty-eighth colored regiment, raised in Indiana, died of cholera in Cincinnati on Friday night.

The Mobile Tribune predicts that the South will be more prosperous five years hence than it has ever been. Exclusive mention will not long be given to the cultivation of cotton, and manufacturing will become one of the leading interests of that section.

All restrictions heretofore directed by the Paymaster-General's office as to the payment of checks or drafts drawn by the constituents in settlement of bounty and other duties of discharged military claimants, have been revoked. Payers, in future, will consider such checks as subject to no special conditions not prescribed by law.

TORONTO, C. W., Nov. 8.

The Toronto Leader this morning, in a long article on the fate of the condemned Fenians, says the formal passing of the sentence of death is not regarded as a certain indication of their fate. Circumstances point toward leniency.

The necessity of shedding blood is not very urgent, nor its utility clearly apparent. These circumstances will probably determine the fate of the prisoners, but if it should turn out that some of them are executed, the substituted punishment will no doubt be exemplary.

Let no one run away with the idea that the Fenian culprit will get free pardon, or anything approaching to it. Public opinion will demand that punishment be certain and severe. Under different circumstances they would assuredly have been hanged. If it were necessary to deter from another raid, to execute, all appeals for mercy would be vain. The Imperial Government will have some suggestions to make on the subject, and by that suggestion the representative of the Crown will with or without further advice shape his course. There is an increasing tendency on the part of the public to believe that the full vigil of law will not be executed on the prisoners sentenced to death.

Already the friends of the prisoners are raising money in the States, on the presumption that they are going to be hanged; and if it be probable that they will not be hanged the donor this is understood the less money they will be able to raise. We can afford to be magnanimous toward better than we can afford to make them martyrs; but our magnanimity cannot go beyond sparing their lives, if it go that far. Punishment proportioned to their crime, with perhaps an attitude of royal clemency, they must receive.

New York, Nov. 8.

The World has the following special over the cable.

London, Nov. 7.

The Bank of England received into its vaults during the month ending Friday, gold to the value of $248,960. The increase in the week after deducting payments was $248,960.

American bonds rated lower.

Liverpool, Nov. 8.—Evening.

The Petroleum market is quiet. The cotton market opened at the rate of last evening. New Orleans middling 15 1/2.

New York, Nov. 7.

The World gives Fenton 8,187 majority; the Herald gives him about 8,900; the Times about 12,000, and the Tribune 12,400.

A Herald's Washington special says on Saturday last Senator Ransom, the Mexican Minister, sent a dispatch to President Juarez, notifying him that Hon. L. D. Campbell, the United States

Minister in Mexico, and Lieut. General Sherman, would arrive at Vera Cruz within a fortnight.

Mr. Campbell is expected here tonight and will probably reach here tomorrow. They will have an interview with the President, Gen. Grant and the Secretary of War, and receive their final instructions, after which they will depart immediately for New York.

Mr. Campbell did not contemplate leaving Ohio for this city for several days, but Secretary

Fenton telegraphed him that he must be in readiness to sail on the 10th inst. from New York, as the United States Steamer San Jacinto is to be ready for her voyage on that date.

General Sherman goes to Mexico, it is understood, to receive there only the Mexican Government, to once more completely reestablished, so that in case it should be found necessary to use

United States troops to enforce the supremacy of the Mexican Republic, an officer may be present of sufficient prominence to order the entrance of United States troops into Mexico and to direct their movements when there.

The Tribune claims the election to Congress of Robertson, in the West Chester, Va. Week in Orange, and Cornell in Ulster, which makes up for the loss of three members from this city and Brooklyn and keeps the delegation as it is at present—20 to 1.

The Times' Washington special says: Those who expect Mr. Johnson to change his course in view of the recent elections will be disappointed.

He will leave the question to the Southern people, and if they adopt the Amendment he will how to the will of the people thus lawfully expressed.

A Boston special to the Times says the returning from all the towns in the State but nineteen give Bullock, for Governor, 64,884 majority.

A special to the World from Mobile says that Dr. Steele announced today that a candidate of the United States Senate from Florida, in opposition to

Gov. Marvin.

Nashville, Nov. 7.

Gov. Brownlow's message was received in the Senate to day. It discusses the question of negro suffrage. He thinks it is the duty of the Senate, with the concurrence of the President, to endeavoring to overthrow the state government, and and asks the prompt action of the Legislature in regard thereto.

St. Louis, Nov. 7.

Nearly complete returns give the golden ticket to the Union ticket, 1,400 majority. The official returns from the First District gives General Fife two hundred and eighty majority over Hogan.

Returns from the Interior are all merged, but those received show Newcomb, Radical, elected in the Second District by about 3,500.

Returns from the Third District favor the re-election of Neill, Conservative. Senatorial Returns from the Fourth District, will probably have a large majority.

McClure is elected from the Fifth District.

The Sixth District is doubtful, but it is thought Van Horn, Radical, to be elected. General Linn, Radical, is elected in the Seventh District by a large majority.

Toronto, Nov. 8.

The Globe has a dispatch from Montreal, and says it is understood that the Government at the late Cabinet meeting, resolved to commute the sentences of Lynch and McMahon.

Hochstadt, Nov. 8.

Louis Fox, celebrated Illinois lawyer, who severely wounded this morning at his residence in this city, by the accidental discharge of a pistol in a pocket of his coat. The ball entered the abdomen and lodged in the thigh, beyond reach of the probe. The surgeon thinks he will recover.

Baltimore, Nov. 8.

Gov. Swann was called upon at his residence last night by a large body of Union veterans, and made a speech congratulating them on the victory obtained. He said the quest on of the removal of the Commissioners would now be settled by the courts, and also that Judge Bowie would be held to strict account for his actions.

New York, Nov. 8.

At this hour no further returns from the interior to change the result for Governor as heretofore telegraphed.

Toronto, Nov. 8.

The excitement over the Fenian trials is diminishing.
